About The Event

We're excited to welcome back the Public Health and Midwifery World Conference in 2026, a gathering that brings together a global community of passionate professionals working to improve the health and well-being of women, families, and communities. Following a successful first edition, the second version of the conference promises more in-depth discussions, broader perspectives, and renewed collaboration across various sectors.

Hosted in the vibrant city of Miami, Florida, from September 18 to 20, 2026, PHMWC 2026 will serve as a platform to explore the evolving landscape of midwifery and public health, both in policy and in practice. As health systems continue to respond to complex global challenges, the conference will focus on real-world strategies that address care disparities, promote innovation, and strengthen community-level health outcomes.

This year's conference theme, Transformative Practices in Public Health and Midwifery Education and Research, will guide the program's direction, highlighting the most pressing topics and transformative ideas shaping the future of maternal, reproductive, and public health. It will also serve as a foundation for expert-led discussions, interactive sessions, and knowledge-sharing across disciplines.

Spanning three days, PHMWC 2026 will feature keynote presentations, panel discussions, workshops, and case-based sessions covering a wide range of critical topics—from maternal and neonatal care to public health interventions, mental health integration, reproductive rights, and global health policy. The event encourages both evidence-driven conversation and practical takeaways that professionals can apply in their own work.

PHMWC 2026 welcomes midwives, public health professionals, clinicians, researchers, educators, policymakers, and community health leaders to come together in a shared mission: improving care delivery and outcomes through collaboration, learning, and leadership.

Join us in Miami as we build on the momentum of the first edition and shape the next chapter in public health and midwifery worldwide.
